

What will happen to Japan's necessary social security expenditure in the future?

FY 2015
Japan's necessary
social security benefits ¥116.8trillion

As of fiscal 2015, Japan's necessary social security benefits were estimated to be 116.8 trillion yen.

FY 2015
Japan's necessary
social security benefits

¥116.8trillion

Medical care

¥37.5trillion

Pension

¥56.2trillion

Japan's estimated pension benefit was 56.2 trillion yen, medical benefit was 37.5 trillion yen,

FY 2015
Japan's necessary
social security benefits

¥116.8trillion

Welfare,
Nursing care and others

¥23.1trillion

Medical care

¥37.5trillion

Pension

¥56.2trillion

and welfare and nursing care benefit was 23.1 trillion yen.

With the advancement of the aging society, it is expected that the amount of social security benefits will continuously increase in the future.

The total amount of social security benefits will be 148.9 trillion yen in 2025.

The percentage of the working generation that supports the social security system has declined.

Securing stable financial sources for the social security system is an important issue.

While the population of workers, who support social security system, is decreasing,

The percentage of the working generation that supports the social security system has declined.

Securing stable financial sources for the social security system is an important issue.

the securing of stable financial resources for social security has become an important issue.